The series finale premieres on October 4, marking the end of Power Book II: Ghost after four seasons. According to Kathryn Busby, President of Programming at Starz, Season 4 will be the final one, but the Power Universe will continue with new storytelling. Starz is shifting its focus from maintaining existing shows like "Power Book II: Ghost" to developing new content, according to CEO Jeffrey Hirsch. This means that "Ghost" will not be returning for a fifth season, with Season 4 being the final one. The network's strategy is centered around creating new shows at lower costs, making it possible to bring in new content without sacrificing viewer engagement or subscriber numbers. The cancellation of "Power Book II: Ghost" may be disappointing to fans, but Starz has confirmed that there will still be exciting new chapters in the Power Universe. These include prequel series like "Book III: Raising Kanan" and "Book IV: Force", as well as a fresh series centered on characters from the original show. While "Power Book II: Ghost" may have come to an end, viewers can catch up on all four seasons of the show on Starz. The final episode, titled "Ghost in the Machine," will premiere on October 4 and provide closure for fans who have been following Tariq's journey throughout the series. Now the money is being invested in the core of the business and it's not losing anything in terms of investment costs and viewership because they know what the target audience wants. The journey of Tariq in the Power universe has ended with Season 4, but that doesn't mean he won't appear in another series or make a cameo. New episodes are on the way with Book III: Raising Kanan and Book IV: Force. A new prequel series is also coming about Ghost and Tommy. US viewers can watch all episodes of Power Book II: Ghost from Seasons 1 to 4 on Starz.
